Are Jilbabs An Article Of Oppression?

The debate concerning extremism and oppression in Islam against women is a never ending one it seems. The media seems to keep on focusing on the rights of Muslim females being violated by mandating dress up articles that keep the shape covered in the majority of Muslim nations. Islamic clothing items such as jilbabs and abayas that cover the shape from head to toe are under constant scrutiny by feminine activists and women's rights spokespersons. Regardless of the fact that most Muslim woman select to wear these jilbabs and jilbabs, the discussions never cease.

The point that the Europe and advocates of pro choice seem to have forgotten is that less than 100 years ago, women living in European and American countries as well used to wear clothes that fully covered them from the throat to the feet. It was considered vulgar and inappropriate for women to expose their bodies to any member of the opposite sex. The long trailing robes and gowns created up the entire contents of the ladies wardrobe. In addition to these gowns, it was mandatory to wear fitted pants below the gown, in order to prevent even the slightest bit of exposure during movement.

So why it that the Muslim lady are is told that the hijabs they wear are created compulsory by the male dominating Muslim society as a way to oppress them? Why was it alright for the western lady to wear dress that were acceptable to the males of their society, though a Muslim lady cannot cover herself in order to please Allah? The females do have a alternative and they choose to wear hijabs and jilbabs in a few cases. They select these dresses simply because they are the proper way of dressing prescribed by Islam.

There's no way that an attire may either oppress or established free any man or lady in the world. The clothing worn just symbolizes the choice of the person and how they opt to portray themselves to the world., as they signify the girl's faith and belief in Allah and his Prophet Muhammad (P. B. U. H). These very jilbabs are mentioned in the Quran as the way for a woman to outfits and each Muslim girl who chooses to wear them feels proud and honoured to be a component of the faith.

These hijabs are definitely not a sign of repression and have to not be considered as such either by the Europe. As a subject of fact, they represent the respect, esteem and value imparted to us by the Prophet Muhammad (P. B. U. H).
